SUMMIT REPORT -- Members of the U.S. Congress and guests applaud as President Richard Nixon (center left) prepares to report on his two-week tour of four nations at the Capitol in Washington. He said the summit talks in Moscow had achieved "solid progress" and had laid the basis for "a new relationship between the two most powerful nations on earth." He cited the various accords signed with Soviet leaders, calling the strategic arms limitation agreements vital to "forestall a major spiraling of the arms race." The 35-minute address was broadcast nationally on television and radio. Mr. Nixon began speaking within a half hour of landing at a nearby airport after a direct flight from Poland. He also visited Austria and Iran briefly. On the podium behind the President are Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, presiding officer of the Senate, and Carl Albert, Speaker of the House of Representatives. (72-2499-C)
