"REGIONAL PEACE" ADVOCATE — President Ronald Reagan tells delegates to the United Nations General Assembly that the United States is "fully committed to support a regional peace process that seeks progress on three levels." He described the three levels as: a process of negotiation among the warring parties in each country; meetings between United States and Soviet representatives; and welcoming each country back into the world economy. The President addressed the delegates during the ceremonies marking the 40th anniversary of the world organization.
