

LUNAR PROSPECTING -- Holding a geological hammer in his hand, Apollo-16 commander John Young prepares to collect lunar samples near a crater in the Descartes highlands of the moon. In front of him is a gnomon, used to establish local vertical, sun angle, scale and lunar color for photographic reference. The battery-powered rover is parked on the far side of the crater.

(72-1608)

