GOALS FOR EDUCATION -- President Ronald Reagan receives a sweat shirt from students at Hickman High School in Columbia, Missouri (top) after addressing a conference of the National Governors Association and the Department of Education. At a nearby elementary school he joins Jennifer Leigh, 9, as they ponder a computer program that simulates the operation of a lemonade stand (bottom). In his speech, Mr. Reagan outlined goals for preparing American students for the 21st century. He said the challenges include: making the best use of science and technology; improving the climate for entrepreneurship and economic growth; building a fair, open and expanding world economy, and making sure that American education is the best in the world.
