

A PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE CAMPAIGNS

Although the biennial Congressional elections this fall in the United States are becoming increasingly active, they will not engender so wide an interest among the vast American electorate as the quadrennial elections when the office of President of the United States is at stake. The next Presidential election will be held in 1956. Here U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower, the Republican Party's nominee for President in 1952, is shown campaigning for the Presidency in Philadelphia, one of America's large cities on the east coast. (54-10084)
