'TURNING POINT' -- President Ronald Reagan delivers his Inaugural Address before a packed, standing crowd in the Rotunda of the Capitol in Washington. Frigid temperatures in the national capital forced the public ceremony indoors. Mr. Reagan said the nation had reached "a turning point" and was "poised for greatness" at the beginning of his second term in office. "The time has come for a new American Emancipation -- a great national drive to tear down economic barriers and liberate the spirit of enterprise in the most distressed areas of the country," he said. "My friends, together we can do this." (85-173)
